I primarily write nonfiction. Research, reflection, and spending time with ideas are important to me. So, this is how I spend most of my time writing - in thought.

~Adam Morris

One that actually relates to all Latin American literature: that is, not every author is interested in being a representative of his or her national culture on the global stage.

~Adam Morris

I only translate authors whose work already interests me as a reader, and that's a decision I make based on multiple encounters with an author's work.

~Adam Morris

I am not one of those translators who think that working closely with the writer will yield the best translation.
