I think you get better at staring into space. Especially living in the South of France.

~Adrian Lyne

Their every instinct - and I have to say this is without exception - is to iron out the bumps, and It's always the bumps that are the most interesting stuff.

~Adrian Lyne

I wanted to make a movie about the arbitrary nature of love.

~Adrian Lyne

Always, with any movie that I do, I have a book of ideas that I've heard, or seen, or whatever, and I always try to incorporate it in the film.

~Adrian Lyne

The danger is that if you have a bunch of ideas that you forget to use.

~Adrian Lyne

The challenge, really, on any new film is to try to avoid that and achieve a few moments that aren't cliché.

~Adrian Lyne

Somebody said that I'm a bit like a sponge, grabbing things here and there, soaking stuff up. [As a director] you have to be, really.

~Adrian Lyne

Well, I think just the fact that you are making your first film is a huge step.

~Adrian Lyne

Well, Brief Encounter is certainly one of my top five favorites of all time. I looked at Brief Encounter very closely, to be honest.

~Adrian Lyne

It's the sort of subject that always interests me: jealousy and the language of suspicion and guilt. I think it interests people.

~Adrian Lyne

I've always been interested in films where you can identify with the actors. Where you can be in their shoes and therefore be more involved if they're people that you recognize.

~Adrian Lyne

I was speaking to Ridley Scott the other day and he makes a film every 18 months. He's amazing really.

~Adrian Lyne

Obviously, in dealing with a relationship, sexuality has to be involved, and jealousy and emotions like that. And I don't know, I've always been intrigued by those emotions.
