You should always choose your associations wisely because people create impressions around the music.

~Alan Palomo

There's something really fun and spooky about that teenage feeling of narcissism or indestructibility, like the idea that every night might be the night before the world ends.

~Alan Palomo

You can't always just put color filters in 80s aerobic videos or take stuff from public-access and look at it in this very ironic, self-conscious way. That only takes you so far.

~Alan Palomo

Is my music indicative of a caffeine-surged green liquid? Probably not.

~Alan Palomo

We really are living in the era that all this sci-fi literature and cinema was centered around, but it's not anything like what we envisioned it to be. It's almost like there's too much choice.

~Alan Palomo

You really need to stop Googling yourself and start being an artist.

~Alan Palomo

I think the Internet has a way of coaching you into this state of mind where you think that every step you make needs to completely supersede the last.

~Alan Palomo

I never willfully want to write the same record twice, which is probably why I jump from project to project. But I can't ignore that there are things that inspire me, and I love celebrating those.

~Alan Palomo

I think it's more about trying to just focus exclusively on writing music and making that a viable, sustainable lifestyle. It's difficult because it forces you to really get creative.

~Alan Palomo

There's a very distinct difference between a really wonderful DIY label and a soft drink company, or a car company, or a clothing brand, and you will always understand that difference.

~Alan Palomo

Things are changing at such a rate that you really can't get too familiar with anything that you own in relation to what sort of functionality it has in your life.

~Alan Palomo

I remember a time when I would hear a band and then want to hear everything that sounded like it; I wanted it to feel like I was tapping into a thing, even if it wasn't.

~Alan Palomo

I can't pretend that I don't subscribe to Internet music culture in that I discover new music and old music simultaneously.

~Alan Palomo

I subscribe to the idea that personality is like a muscle, and sometimes you have to let it go limp and detach yourself from any associations.

~Alan Palomo

I have this eerie feeling that by the time I'm 33, reality will not exist in the same plane as it did before. It's cool but also a little creepy.
