Don't let a culture or society's rules define who you are; you define who you are.

~Amma Asante

Don't take no as a full stop, treat it like a comma.

~Amma Asante

What is right can never be impossible.

~Amma Asante

As people of color, we're left out of history. History is sort of told around us. We're bystanders, we're passive, we're observers. We're never the center of our history.

~Amma Asante

When you're in political times, you want to reflect those political times, and sometimes going back to our past is the best way to look at our present.

~Amma Asante

People assume thoughts and processes about you that may have nothing to do with you whatsoever, but they make political assumptions and assertions about who you are based on your choice of partner.

~Amma Asante
