Humans have "dominion" over animals. But that "dominion" (radah in Hebrew) does not mean despotism, rather we are set over creation to care for what God has made and to treasure God's own treasures.

~Andrew Linzey

It is an unfortunate fact that those people who are most eloquent in their demand for the conservation of animals are often those most eager to violate animal life at the first opportunity.

~Andrew Linzey

One cannot get to animal rights by trampling on human rights.

~Andrew Linzey

There are only two ways to deal with the media: either elect to take the Buddha's vow of eternal silence, or make one's voice known as responsibly as one humanly can, and take the consequences.

~Andrew Linzey

If tomorrow we decided only to desist from killing and causing suffering for sport and entertainment, the world would be significantly better for animals. Even this we have failed to achieve.

~Andrew Linzey

I would happily, sometimes more than happily, have vacated my role as an animal theologian, if there were others prepared to take my place.

~Andrew Linzey

I fear theology is--in the words attributed to William Temple--"still in its infancy" when it comes to animals.
