It's important to attend funerals. It is important to view the body, they say, and to see it committed to earth or fire because unless you do that, the loved one dies for you again and again.

~Ann-Marie MacDonald

Hope is a gift. You can't choose to have it. To believe and yet to have no hope is to thirst beside a fountain.

~Ann-Marie MacDonald

Depression is anger slowed down; panic is grief speeded up.

~Ann-Marie MacDonald

Piece by piece living is hard to do. It may even feel like the hardest thing. But it has this going for it: you never need to know what it is you're carrying on your shoulders.

~Ann-Marie MacDonald

Memory plays tricks. Memory is another word for story, and nothing is more unreliable.

~Ann-Marie MacDonald

Writing is a hellish task, best snuck up on, whacked on the head, robbed and left for dead.

~Ann-Marie MacDonald

Lies like that are not a sin, they are a sacrifice.

~Ann-Marie MacDonald

They are so young, they forget that the world is not as in love with them as they are.

~Ann-Marie MacDonald

Do you think there's such a thing as a ghost who masquerades as a person? Do you believe that there are people whose bodies are still alive here on earth but whose souls are already in hell?

~Ann-Marie MacDonald

The world should not be organized to require heroines, and when one is required but fails to appear, we should not judge.

~Ann-Marie MacDonald

The thief you must fear the most is not the one who steals mere things.

~Ann-Marie MacDonald

There are some stories you can't hear enough. They are the same every time you hear them. But you are not. That's one reliable way of understanding time.

~Ann-Marie MacDonald

In terms of the secrets that imbue and underlie Fall on Your Knees, they were as much of a mystery to me as I was creating the story as they are to the readers.
