I wish I had the power to flip my reality upside down like an hourglass, and that life wasn't a finite affair, but rather a perpetually recurring passage through a hole in time.

~Anne Fortier

Only weak men want women to be weak.

~Anne Fortier

I'll be back tomorrow," he said, "at nine o'clock. Don't open your door to anyone else." "Not even my balcony door?" "Especially not your balcony door."

~Anne Fortier

By the time we left college, I had become my own image: a dandelion in the flower bed of society. Kinda cute, but still a weed.

~Anne Fortier

While at Oxford in 1999, I met Jonathan Fortier, who is a Montreal-born Canadian. Despite the challenges of a transatlantic relationship, we remained keen on each other and eventually married in 2002.

~Anne Fortier

Everything we say is a story. But nothing we say is just a story.

~Anne Fortier

You were right and I was wrong. When life hurts more than death, it is not worth living.

~Anne Fortier

Peppo!" I yelled, pulling at my cousin's suspenders. "I really don't want to be arrested, okay?" "Don't worry!" Peppo turned a corner and accelerated as he spoke. "I go too fast for police!"

~Anne Fortier

I absolutely believe the past had its share of warrior women who fought like men. Whether some of these were the actual Amazons from Greek myth is another matter.

~Anne Fortier

If you let go of me now,â€• I whispered, stretching against him, â€œit could be another six hundred years before you find me again. Are you willing to take that risk?

~Anne Fortier

Perhaps. But the firstborn of hope is tragedy.

~Anne Fortier

It's what we call a dolce pazzia... a sweet madness. Once you feel it, you will never want to leave it.

~Anne Fortier

Don't underestimate the power of events that happened a long time ago. That is the tragic flaw of modern man.

~Anne Fortier

I did not know my soul until I saw it's reflection in your eyes.

~Anne Fortier

You owe me nothing, but I want everything.

~Anne Fortier

Think about it. He drinks poison. What kind of man drinks poison? She is the one who stabs herself with his dagger. The manly way.

~Anne Fortier

...it is fifty percent what they see, and fifty percent what they think they see.

~Anne Fortier

And whether or not we had now paid our dues, he was my blessing, and I was his.

~Anne Fortier

After the dress rehearsal that afternoon, someone had misplaced the vial of poison, and for lack of better, Romeo would have to commit suicide by eating Tic Tacs.

~Anne Fortier

We are all cups, and our destiny is poured according to measures we cannot understand, cannot influence.

~Anne Fortier

When the old men fight, the young people die.

~Anne Fortier

In many ways, a degree in the history of ideas is the ideal training for an aspiring writer.

~Anne Fortier

Great love, you believe, carries the seeds of great sorrow.

~Anne Fortier

.... "death turns all men into great lovers. Would that they were equally ardent while the lady was still alive!

~Anne Fortier

...had always taken for granted that the whole world was in a state of constantly fluctuating madness, and that a neurosis was not an illness, but a fact of life, like pimples.

~Anne Fortier

Janice used to say that instinct was reason in a hurry; I was not so sure about the reason part.

~Anne Fortier

Verona is a very beautiful city, but Siena just never ceases to fascinate me.

~Anne Fortier

I think Shakespeare is everybody's treasure.

~Anne Fortier

A novel is, hopefully, the starting point of a conversation, one in which the author engages readers and asks that they see things from a different point of view than they might otherwise.
