If we don't risk it all, we may as well not write at all.

~Anne Stuart

You'd be better served if you gave me a moment to regain my self-control and let me remove my boots. It's the least a gentleman can do." "And you're such a gentleman." "Not with you, love. But I'm trying.

~Anne Stuart

She had the underwear of a thirteen-year-old, as well, he thought. He glanced back at her. But the shoes of a courtesan.

~Anne Stuart

She froze. He reached up and took her hand in his, pulling the knife away, making her drop it on the floor. "Show me how much you hate me," he whispered against her mouth. "Prove it to me.

~Anne Stuart

The best thing to do if you start thinking such things (falling in love) is to lie down and wait for it to pass. It always does.

~Anne Stuart

You tell anyone that I cried, and I'll cut your liver out." "Do you even know where a human liver resides?" [...] "Yes," she said, and punched him in it.

~Anne Stuart

She tried to allow herself only one biting remark an hour, and she had already overstepped her allowance.

~Anne Stuart

If I am ever in the position where I wish to seduce someone I will simply assure her it's better than rats.

~Anne Stuart

If you lust after someone and have an absurd and overwhelming need to protect them, then the best way to deal with the situation is to marry the person.

~Anne Stuart

Jesus, woman!" he snapped. "When did we have to become Romeo and Juliet?

~Anne Stuart

If this were a different time, a different place, I would take you to bed with me and make love to you for days.

~Anne Stuart

I lied. I do that, you know, when it suits me. I would have thought you'd realized that by now.

~Anne Stuart

After all, if spinster chaperons required their own spinster chaperons there simply wouldn't be enough to go around.

~Anne Stuart

She raised her head finally. He looked the same, but then, he always did. She'd seem him kill twice, and he betrayed no reaction at all. He was a monster, not even human. But he was her monster.

~Anne Stuart

And telling you I care about you is a waste of time. I wouldn't have crossed the ocean, come out of hiding, tracked you down, if you didn't matter to me.

~Anne Stuart

Lord save us, first you have a heart, now you have a god? Will wonders never cease?
