Art has to change things, and if it was immediately acceptable it would not be doing the job.

~Antony Gormley

Art is not about understanding, it's about experience.

~Antony Gormley

Our appearance belongs to others, we live in the darkness of the body-part of all darkness but felt.

~Antony Gormley

Art is the means by which we communicate what it feels like to be alive.

~Antony Gormley

We are not moving towards some kind of goal. We are at the goal, and it is changing with us. If art has any purpose, it is to open our eyes to that fact.

~Antony Gormley

The elemental world we all live in is the darkness of the body.

~Antony Gormley

I want to start where language ends.

~Antony Gormley

Art is not about objects of high monetary exchange. It's about reasserting our firsthand experience in present time.

~Antony Gormley

I was educated by monks - I thank them dearly for the education they gave me, but I am no longer a Catholic.

~Antony Gormley

It is as much the conversations between objects as between us and objects that make museums so valuable.

~Antony Gormley

I have to say that I reject somewhat the distinction between something called art and something called public art. I think all art demands and desires to be seen.

~Antony Gormley

We're not on a journey to a goal, the goal is with us changing with us.

~Antony Gormley

I think critics are very useful. But I think that they, in a way, betray their position when they stop people looking for themselves.

~Antony Gormley

It is a depressing business talking to journalist.
