Expose yourself to as much randomness as possible.

~Ben Casnocha

Expose yourself to as much as possible. Attend conferences no one else is attending. Read books no one else is reading. Talk to people no one else is talking to.

~Ben Casnocha

Long-term goals are dangerous. They limit you. They hinder you from reacting to new conditions.

~Ben Casnocha

The internet tends to make smart people smarter and dumb people dumber.

~Ben Casnocha

I'm just the smallest dot in a big map of human history.

~Ben Casnocha

Rule of thumb: Be skeptical of things you learned before you could read. E.g., religion.

~Ben Casnocha

It got a little stressful in my first two years of high school, trying to make conference calls with investors in between classes, but I definitely learned a lot of important time-management lessons.

~Ben Casnocha

I have a broad range of interests, so I'll always be working on something.

~Ben Casnocha

If you really understand something, you can: 1) explain it using a clear metaphor and 2) explain the strongest counter-argument to the idea.

~Ben Casnocha

Sometimes Plan B can have the same desired outcome, but a different path for getting there.

~Ben Casnocha

I really focused on three things in high school - my company, basketball and my school work.

~Ben Casnocha

I don't want to be normal. I want to be something else.

~Ben Casnocha

I'm skeptical of passive learning. If you don't write down what you're hearing and learning, what the odds you remember it?

~Ben Casnocha

Sometimes I have to pause to make the distinction between Ben the teenager and Ben the businessman.

~Ben Casnocha

If frequency with which you cite an education credential does not decrease over the course of your life, you're not accomplishing very much.

~Ben Casnocha

I've always loved to write, and I kept a diary of what I thought about my business, being an entrepreneur and other things of interest to me.
