Real life ... it was an ambiguous world, where actions sometimes had no meaning, where chaos reigned and no one was allowed to see the big picture, only their small portion of it.

~Bentley Little

Life is short. Eternity is long.

~Bentley Little

There were shadows galore in the dim light, but there was one shadow that did not correspond to any object in the room. It lurked next to the fireplace, a formless, undulating darkness.

~Bentley Little

Murder is an inherently evil act, no matter what the circumstances, no matter how convincing the rationalizations.

~Bentley Little

Hope was a dangerous emotion that more often than not led men into foolishness and peril, made them risk their lives and lose their wives and part with fortunes that they never recovered.

~Bentley Little

Names have power. In certain cultures, just speaking a man's name gives you mastery over him.

~Bentley Little

I always thought the appeal for vampires are the same as religion, the desire to avoid death and live forever.

~Bentley Little

Horror writers can write about everything in the real world that a mainstream novelist can--plus the supernatural, which is the most fertile field for metaphor imaginable.

~Bentley Little

In real life, good people die all the time and aholes can live long and happy lives. It's a crapshoot.

~Bentley Little

Real life was messier than fiction, and in it you didn't always have time to do or say the right things.

~Bentley Little

I think the internet is a great marketing tool--but marketing is not my job. I'm a writer. My job is to write novels.

~Bentley Little

I write horror because I enjoy it. I'm endlessly fascinated by the supernatural, by death, by darkness. And, to be honest, I don't have much choice. This is the way my mind works.

~Bentley Little

An enigma? That's not a bad persona to have. I should probably shut up and let the mystery continue! It's good for my career.
