In our town there was a Gestapo officer who loved to play chess. After the occupation began, he found out that my father was the chess master of the region, and so he had him to his house every night.

~Bruno Schulz

One thing must be avoided at all costs: narrow-mindedness, pedantry, dull pettiness.

~Bruno Schulz

Reality is as thin as paper and betrays with all its cracks its imitative character.

~Bruno Schulz

Could it be that time is too narrow for all events? Could it happen that all the seats within time might have been sold? Worried, we run along the train of events, preparing ourselves for the journey.

~Bruno Schulz

Lifelessness is only a disguise behind which hide unknown forms of life.

~Bruno Schulz

My ideal goal is to "mature" into childhood. That would be genuine maturity.

~Bruno Schulz

Now the windows, blinded by the glare of the empty square, had fallen asleep. The balconies declared their emptiness to heaven; the open doorways smelt of coolness and wine.

~Bruno Schulz

Under the imaginary table that separates me from my readers, don't we secretly clasp each other's hands?

~Bruno Schulz

And one's wandering proved as sterile and pointless as the excitement produced by a close study of pornographic albums.

~Bruno Schulz

The days hardened with cold and boredom like last year's loaves of bread. One began to cut them with blunt knives without appetite, with a lazy indifference.

~Bruno Schulz

This enraged the other Nazi so much that the next morning he came to our house and he shot my father.
