What a fearful object a long-neglected duty gets to be

~Chauncey Wright

The questions of philosophy proper are human desires and fears and aspirations - human emotions - taking an intellectual form.

~Chauncey Wright

And we owe science to the combined energies of individual men of genius, rather than to any tendency to progress inherent in civilization.

~Chauncey Wright

We receive the truths of science by compulsion. Nothing but ignorance is able to resist them.

~Chauncey Wright

Let one persuade many, and he becomes confirmed and convinced, and cares for no better evidence.

~Chauncey Wright

The accidental causes of science are only accidents relatively to the intelligence of a man.

~Chauncey Wright
