[Paper Girls] needed to have a certain kind of almost neon style to it, but at the same time we wanted also to show the modern perspective that we had.

~Cliff Chiang

We wanted the book [Paper Girls] to feel to evoke the '80s, but not necessarily feel that it was drawn then.

~Cliff Chiang

Back then, as a kid, you could really just do whatever you wanted until your parents got home.

~Cliff Chiang

The '80s were a really different time for kids. Technology has changed so much of how we stay in touch and keep tabs on people.

~Cliff Chiang

Nothing I've worked on has been asked this much of me to put it on the page [like Paper Girls].

~Cliff Chiang

[Paper Girls] is very much is about how we are thinking about our past and growing up.

~Cliff Chiang

I don't think I've ever worked on a project [Paper Girls] that is this personal. We draw so much on our memories of growing and we're putting so much of our present day into it as well.

~Cliff Chiang
