Its going to be interesting to see how society deals with artificial intelligence, but it will definitely be cool.

~Colin Angle

In the end, robots do things that people can do. So there is a cost above which you can hire somebody to do it, and that bounds the opportunity.

~Colin Angle

When I was building robots in the early 1990s, the problems of voice recognition, image understanding, VOIP, even touchscreen technologies - these were robotics problems.

~Colin Angle

Hollywood likes to imagine robots as mechanical copies of ourselves - which is a terrible idea.

~Colin Angle

The utility of the robot needs to come first. It's business model over technology.

~Colin Angle

That's exciting because to create new value in the robot space quickly, you need to stand on the shoulders of other technological developments.

~Colin Angle

We learned that very few people care how you accomplish something. Instead, these people care more about whether you create value for your end user.

~Colin Angle

I think, people are generally willing to imagine robots of all shapes, as humanoid robots are not practical.

~Colin Angle

Building robot versions of people is very expensive.

~Colin Angle

I grew up mostly in Schenectady, N.Y. From an early age, building and creating things was a real passion for me.
