Mostly, two miles an hour is good going.

~Colin Fletcher

The best dress for walking is nakedness.

~Colin Fletcher

Every walk of life falls under the Testicular Imperative: Either you have the world by them, or it has you.

~Colin Fletcher

I do what I do instinctively, and that's me. If you like me, that's fine; if you don't like me then don't watch me.

~Colin Fletcher

Details of the many walks I made along the crest have blurred, now, into a pleasing tapestry of grass and space and sunlight.

~Colin Fletcher

I find that the three truly great times for thinking thoughts are when I am standing in the shower, sitting on the john, or walking. And the greatest of these, by far, is walking.

~Colin Fletcher

Although the vast majority of walkers never even think of using a walking staff, I unhesitatingly include it among the foundations of the house that travels on my back.

~Colin Fletcher

I had better admit right away that walking can in the end become an addiction ... even in this final stage it remains a delectable madness, very good for sanity, and I recommend it with passion.

~Colin Fletcher

Under most conditions, the best roof for your bedroom is the sky. This commonsense arrangement saves weight, time, energy, and money.

~Colin Fletcher

People will assign irrational importance to almost anything in quotes on top of a pleasant image

~Colin Fletcher

Life should be an unfinished business.

~Colin Fletcher

Freed from the pressure of haste, the tyranny of film, and now the restraint of clothes, I found myself looking more closely at what went on around me.
