any effort at large-scale reorganization - that is, any project spanning more than two years and, more generally, anything that has not already been done - is inevitably doomed to failure.

~Corinne Maier

Remember that work is not a place for self-fulfillment. If it were, you would know it.

~Corinne Maier

Ethics is a bit like culture: the less one has, the more one flaunts it.

~Corinne Maier

Only communist regimes have churned out more jargon than modern business.

~Corinne Maier

Ethics is a detergent word, used time and time again to clean consciences without scrubbing.

~Corinne Maier

Never, under any circumstances, accept a position of responsibility. You will be forced to work harder with no other benefits than a few extra bucks - 'peanuts,' as they say, if that.

~Corinne Maier

Money counts more than you think.

~Corinne Maier

'Manager' is a title, not a function. It's better to be one than not. Since you spend all day doing the job of the person above you, the higher up you are, the less you have to do.

~Corinne Maier

Corporations never actually mention 'money'; that would be vulgar.

They prefer such words as 'turnover,' 'profit,' 'salary,' 'revenue,' 'budget,' 'premium,' and 'savings,' all much more refined.

~Corinne Maier

The religion of the corporate world is novelty. What is new is always right.

~Corinne Maier

Business and its logic of productivity have become the reference point in a society that thinks marketing every time it opens its mouth.

~Corinne Maier

the middle manager is doomed to remain just that. Once an office rat, always an office rat.

~Corinne Maier

When you're 'recruiting' people in temporary positions for the firm (short-term contracts, free-lancers, etc.) treat them well: remember, they're the only ones who actually do any work.
