The bravest thing you can do when you are not brave is to profess courage and act accordingly.

~Corra May Harris

So long as a man attends to his business the public does not count his drinks. When he fails they notice if he takes even a glass of root beer.

~Corra May Harris

sanity, in my opinion, is an achievement. I have seen very few well-balanced people in my life who were not dunces.

~Corra May Harris

Not everything you hear about yourself can be considered good publicity. And if you have delicate sensibilities, the currycomb of public imagination frequently rubs your vanities the wrong way.

~Corra May Harris

I love truth, although I shall die hating mere facts, because they are misleading.

~Corra May Harris

Maybe I shall never achieve happiness, but one thing I have had - the terrible wisdom of love.

~Corra May Harris

I believe if we can wait long enough that every honorable sorrow will become a kind of joy.

~Corra May Harris

I was not too stupid to learn, but too smart. Some instinct must have warned me that a woman accomplished in the domestic arts is frequently enslaved by them.

~Corra May Harris

No one has yet had the courage to memorialize his wealth on his tombstone. A dollar mark would not look well there.

~Corra May Harris

This is the wonderful thing about the pure in heart--they do see God.

~Corra May Harris

if one's natural feelings are suppressed long enough one develops supernatural feelings and feels surer of having a soul.

~Corra May Harris

... to be human is to be on the defensive, somewhere, somehow.

~Corra May Harris

Words are dangerous things.

~Corra May Harris

It is easier to give all your goods to feed the poor, or not to have any goods - only your virtues, to boast of - than it is to judge the rich with charity.

~Corra May Harris

war is a ferocious form of insanity. Nothing can justify it.
