God's love, and hence the love with which we come to love God, is eros and agape at once: a desire for the other that delights in the distance of otherness.

~David Bentley Hart

true philosophical atheism must be regarded as a superstition, often nurtured by an infantile wish to live in a world proportionate to one's own hopes or conceptual limitations.

~David Bentley Hart

Wisdom is the recovery of innocence at the far end of experience.

~David Bentley Hart

The one reality you can't evade is personal experience.

~David Bentley Hart

The world is unable to provide any account of its own actuality, and yet there it is all the same.

~David Bentley Hart

Evidence for or against God, if it is there, saturates every moment of the experience of existence, every employment of reason, every act of consciousness, every encounter with the world around us.

~David Bentley Hart

Popular atheism is not a philosophy but a therapy.

~David Bentley Hart

Empiricism in the sciences is a method; naturalism in philosophy is a metaphysics; and the latter neither follows from nor underlies the former.
