One day robots may even babysit our kids, a job that has always required a human touch.

~David Pogue

If you continue to improve a product enough, you'll eventually ruin it.

~David Pogue

If Apple ever lowers the iPod's price and develops Windows software for it, watch out: the invasion of the iPod people will surely begin in earnest.

~David Pogue

The Kindle is just the razor. The books are the blades - ka-ching!

~David Pogue

Why is Wi-Fi free at cheap hotels, but $14 a night at expensive ones?

~David Pogue

My interest was magic, believe it or not. I became an amateur magician and did something like 400 magic shows through my teen years.

~David Pogue

I travel a ridiculous amount, so I've thought a lot about, and spent a lot of time refining, what I carry and how I carry it.

~David Pogue

An international team of psychiatrists has flown to Redmond, WA in an attempt to discover exactly what makes Bill Gates tick. And, more especially, what makes him go cuckoo every half hour.

~David Pogue

Scientists in California have discovered a chemical in the brain that causes use of Windows in otherwise normal human beings. It's called alcohol.

~David Pogue

A running theme in my life is my inability to say no to anything.

~David Pogue

For an industry that's built on science, the technology world sure has its share of myths.

~David Pogue

Just as words in their proper places form sentences, each individual strike must be done in the proper order to get the desired result: a flat stone blade.

~David Pogue

Everyones always asking me when Apple will come out with a cell phone. My answer is, Probably never.

~David Pogue

The Kindle is the most successful electronic book-reading tablet so far, but that's not saying much; Silicon Valley is littered with the corpses of e-book reader projects.

~David Pogue

For the last 15 years, Microsoft's master business plan seems to have been, "Wait until somebody else has a hit. Then copy it."

~David Pogue

People won't start dumping Google en masse; Google is a habit.
