Doing what you love means dealing with things you don't.

~David Shore

People choose the paths that grant them the greatest rewards for the least amount of effort.

~David Shore

You make decisions and choices, and you're never going to know if they're the ideal choices, but you make them and you make the most of them.

~David Shore

You're supposed to trust friends. You have no reason to be his friend? That is part of the pleasure of friendship: trusting without absolute evidence and then being rewarded for that trust.

~David Shore

Only two things you ignore: things that aren't important and things you wish weren't important. And wishing never works.

~David Shore

Like I always say, there's no "I" in "team." There is a "me," though, if you jumble it up.

~David Shore

If we were to care about every person suffering on this planet, life would shut down.

~David Shore

You have to be driven by the stories that you want to tell. You can't simply be responding, or there won't be any real heart to those stories anymore.

~David Shore

You have to make changes before people are clamoring for changes. If people are asking for changes, it's too late.

~David Shore

The saying within the writer's room, which were my words of wisdom, if you will, was, "The punishment doesn't have to fit the crime, but there has to be a crime."
