Nobody really knows what the market is going to do, but it sure looks like we are going to have a lot more volatility.

~David Wessel

If the government can't get the economy moving again, they have a lot of fundamental problems.

~David Wessel

There is also a concern that there is a lack of demand of oil. And so when commodity prices fall, it's good if you happen to be a consumer, but it's sometimes seen as symptom of a weakening economy.

~David Wessel

I think the one thing that's going on here is that people are saying, uh-oh, the Chinese economy might be slowing more than we thought and the government is having a hard time stimulating it again.

~David Wessel

It may be that the U.S. stock market starts to rise if people think it's gone far enough.

~David Wessel

China's stock market is not very big. And yet when stock market has a bad day in China, it seems, Europe has a bad day and then we have a bad day.

~David Wessel

Chinese don't really believe in markets. They like stability, they like control.

~David Wessel

I think the Chinese are really amateurs when it comes to running markets.

~David Wessel

The only reason you would want your currency to fall, if you could control it, is in order to get more exports.

~David Wessel

If you don't have a set of principles that you can explain for what you are doing, then how can anybody know what you're going to do next?
