A mouse slid out from under his hat and scrambled down his sleeve, across his lap, and down to the floor. Nothing,' said Fenworth, 'should distract from a wizard's dignity.

~Donita K. Paul

Focus on what's ahead. Use what is behind.

~Donita K. Paul

I shall not tell your husband and you shall not tell my wife." Tell them what?" That you and I were outwitted by a ropma." That would be shameful." Girl, we could never live it down.

~Donita K. Paul

Wear pink!' her mother had said. 'It confuses the enemy.

~Donita K. Paul

Contented children are valuable, as is the peace that surrounds them.

~Donita K. Paul

The odd thing, my dear," said her father, "is that once one has ceased trying to protect self, one finds one's self in a very comfortable position."
"Where?" asked Kale "In Wulder's care.

Fenworth owned a world-famous library. More rooms held books than beds. Pillows stuffed in niches and comfortable chairs scattered throughout each room offered abundant paces to curl up and read.

~Donita K. Paul

There's nothing like a mission to save the world to liven up a vacation.

~Donita K. Paul

Perhaps it's rude to notice when a wizard does something strange.

~Donita K. Paul

Gymn says your fine. He's examined your internal organs and found nothing lacking.

~Donita K. Paul

Fenworth!' Yes?' You bore me with your prattle.' Oh, regrettable that. Why don't you seek the company of someone who doesn't prattle?
Seems like a good solution to your problem.

~Donita K. Paul

Come close now,' ordered Fenworth. 'Time for an exit. I think we'll whirl, Kale likes to whirl. Hold hands. Let's stay together, children. I want no one lost.

~Donita K. Paul

Well, what are we waiting for? ...She said 'children.' I bet that's anyone under a couple of centuries old. Let's go.

~Donita K. Paul

Well then,' said Femworth as he came to his feet, 'let's go. Sounds like a delightful challenge before supper. Stimulate the appetite, or kill it. Interesting either way.

~Donita K. Paul

Now it's like a fog has lifted. I sense Leetu just as clearly as I can see the moon.' Your eyes are closed, and the moon as a haze around it.
