I have nothing against diamonds, or rubies or emeralds or sapphires. I do object when their acquisition is complicit in the debasement of children or the destruction of a country.

~Edward Zwick

I think one of the privileges of being a filmmaker is the opportunity to remain a kind of perpetual student.

~Edward Zwick

There is no reason why challenging themes and engaging stories have to be mutually exclusive - in fact, each can fuel the other.

~Edward Zwick

It's always great to do a movie that you find is entertaining, but also can give some sort of political or social message.

~Edward Zwick

I don't think movies can ever be too intense, but people have to understand why you're showing them the things you are showing them.

~Edward Zwick

You do these movies, you give it out to the world and you really have no idea how people are going to react to you.

~Edward Zwick

However much I may like to talk about or be interested in a more philosophical or moral agenda, [film] is, ultimately, about narrative. And it's about telling stories that are engaging and dramatic.

~Edward Zwick

I never thought about that ever throughout the entire course of my career about choosing a specific role because it would make me seem more man-like.

~Edward Zwick

I've been in plenty of situations where I thought the film would turn out one way or my performance would be looked at one way and it was an entirely different situation.

~Edward Zwick

There is a segment of the American population that has been excluded from the national myth, and that should be redressed.
