What is right for one couple is wrong for another. I would say that there are many more important factors to a happy marriage.

~Elizabeth Aston

Anyone may have diamonds: an heirloom is an ornament of quite a different kind.

~Elizabeth Aston

Charge less, but charge. Otherwise, you will not be taken seriously, and you do your fellow artists no favours if you undercut the market.

~Elizabeth Aston

One remembers horrors, I think, for the rest of one's life, but memories do not always remain so sharp, and with time, and new circumstance, do not affect us so powerfully.

~Elizabeth Aston

One's first love is always perfect until one meets one's second love.

~Elizabeth Aston

Clergymen have much the same in their breeches as other men.

~Elizabeth Aston

It is a sadness of growing older that some of us lose our ardent appreciation of what is new and different and difficult.

~Elizabeth Aston

How close the sexes sometimes come to one another. It is as much a matter of behaviour and the sphere in which they move that separates the masculine part of humanity from the feminine.

~Elizabeth Aston

Easy enough to dismiss others' problems when you had none of your own.

~Elizabeth Aston

Concern for someone else was a good remedy for taking the mind off one's own troubles.

~Elizabeth Aston

People make one happy, not houses.

~Elizabeth Aston

Love has no place in a lawyer's office.

~Elizabeth Aston

The trouble with lies was that once started, the fiction had to be continued, and it was hard always to be remembering details that you had made up upon the spur of the moment.

~Elizabeth Aston

When men are scared of a woman, they always accuse her of being mannish.

~Elizabeth Aston

There was no escaping by means of any journey, however adventurous, one took one's problems and sorrows with one.

~Elizabeth Aston

There are people who may be trusted, men as well as women. There are as many difference in their natures as there are flowers in these meadows.

~Elizabeth Aston

People make one happy, not houses? I do not think so. Houses are more to be trusted than people.

~Elizabeth Aston

It's not what you want in this life, it's what you get that you have to do with.

~Elizabeth Aston

A man's looks are measured by the depth of his pockets.
