A garden always has a point.

~Elizabeth Hoyt

Shh,â€• he whispered. â€œYou asked me if I loved you. I do. I love you more than life itself. Nothing matters in this world but that you live. Can you do that for me? Can you live?

~Elizabeth Hoyt

Every word you have ever uttered, is engraved upon my heart.

-Lazarus to his mother.

~Elizabeth Hoyt

I would do violence for one glimpse of your naked breasts. Bleed for one taste of your nipple on my tongue. (Winter Makepeace)

~Elizabeth Hoyt

Your cousin might be a pretty face, but you, my darling, courageous, maddening, seductive, mysterious, wonderful Diana, you are the Duchess of Wakefield. My duchess.

~Elizabeth Hoyt

Each time it was like a stray bit of glass pressed into the softness of her heart, grinding, grinding, oh so silently until she no longer noticed when she bled.

~Elizabeth Hoyt

There are no heroes on the battlefield, my lady; there are only survivors.

~Elizabeth Hoyt

Weep for me. Bear my pain. Take my come. For I can give you nothing else.

~Elizabeth Hoyt

As for inspiration, I find stark fear of missing the deadline very inspiring.

~Elizabeth Hoyt

This is my social face," he said lightly. "Don't confuse it with the animal beneath.

~Elizabeth Hoyt

I watched you for years," she whispered. The tears were drying on her cheeks, and heat was building within her. If he would just touch her. Touch her there. "I watched you and you never saw me.

~Elizabeth Hoyt

There's something about her," Caire said in a low voice. "She cares for everyone about her, yet neglects herself. I want to be the one who cares for her.

~Elizabeth Hoyt

If I'm good enough to bed, surely I'm good enough to wed.

~Elizabeth Hoyt

Do you think 'Duke' is a good name?' she asked. His face blanked for a second before it cleared. He glanced at the dog in consideration. 'I don't think so. He would outrank me.

~Elizabeth Hoyt

But like the legless man, I'm unaccountably fascinated by those who can dance.

~Elizabeth Hoyt

Dear God. She ached, wanting something that she knew was a sin. Wanting a man who was sin itself.

~Elizabeth Hoyt

Will ye come with me?â€• he whispered. And she answered without hesitation. â€œYes, please.

~Elizabeth Hoyt

I think I do pretty well with child characters. It's hard to write kids that are realistic, not annoying, and bring something to the story.

~Elizabeth Hoyt

Good.â€• He straddled her, caging her with his body. â€œWere it up to me, all of London would know what we do here. -Griffin to Hero.

~Elizabeth Hoyt

I decided long ago that my family absolutely comes first, and I don't regret that. I do, however, sometimes wish I had an extra five hours or so in the day!

~Elizabeth Hoyt

You say my name like a lover, so soft, so sweet. I want to lick the word from your lips, sip the exhaled breath from your mouth. I want to possess you utterly. Right now. Right here.

~Elizabeth Hoyt

Shhh,â€• he murmured against her mouth. â€œDon't talk. Don't think. Just feel.

~Elizabeth Hoyt

Excuse me, but I believe you have my lady,â€• one of them said in a quiet, deep voice that sent veritable chills down George's spine. Harry.

~Elizabeth Hoyt

Finally he turned his head toward her face and brushed a kiss over her cheek. " love you and I believe with all my heart that you love me as well. Why can't you say it, Hero?"

~Elizabeth Hoyt

Do you love me Hero?" His pale green eyes were full of torment. "Do you love me like I love you?"

~Elizabeth Hoyt

Just because I don't deserve her doesn't mean I won't fight to keep her.

~Elizabeth Hoyt

He grinned, though his face was strained. "That's it, love. Use me to make yerself feel good."

~Elizabeth Hoyt

But I intend to make you respectable.

~Elizabeth Hoyt

He treasured her, treasured her tears, treasured her love for others. Her heart might even be big enough to fill that empty space in his own chest. Perhaps she could be his heart as well.
