As an artist, you're always trying to reach a new height, do something new, try something you haven't done before, and push your boundaries.

~Eric Balfour

The beauty of every experience you have is that hopefully you'll learn something from it.

~Eric Balfour

As an actor, most of the time, you only have so much say in how, what and where things go. As a director, you really get to paint a bigger picture. You have many more brushes to use.

~Eric Balfour

I'm not a trained chef, so I end up making stuff up. It either turns out brilliant or an absolute disaster. I just go for it.

~Eric Balfour

One of the greatest things I've learned, as an actor, was how to talk to actors.

~Eric Balfour

I believe in my own abilities and my future enough that I will not take a job that could hurt the integrity of my long-term career.

~Eric Balfour

I already love acting and I love actors, so being able to communicate with actors and to bring performances out of them, and to tell a story and aid them, is really exciting for me.

~Eric Balfour

Directing is something that I'd been wanting and hoping to do, as I've grown into myself.

~Eric Balfour

The stories that I like to tell and the movies I like are always grounded in the emotional arc of the characters.

~Eric Balfour

If you felt like you've done the best thing you could possibly ever do, it's probably time to hang up your spurs because there's not much else to do.

~Eric Balfour

A lot of why we become actors is to fill a void that we have and a part of that void is to live out and tell stories that we've lived or that we hope would have been different in our own lives.

~Eric Balfour

At a certain level, great actors who are successful actors don't have to worry about it. They can just go for it because they believe in themselves.

~Eric Balfour

As an actor, I've always paid attention on sets. I've always watched, learned and listened, and you start to see things differently. You always leave yourself an out.

~Eric Balfour
