It works for me, the way I play drums and the things I do but I also would like to know proper technique. Mainly for health - to last longer, be able to play longer.

~Eric Hernandez

I am self taught. My dad threw me in with a drum set at the age of four and I figured it out!

~Eric Hernandez

I watch YouTube and other peers of mine. There's a lot of things I can't do and also I'm very unorthodox, I want to work on my mechanics and technique.

~Eric Hernandez

I immersed myself in the police work and I guess drumming wasn't even a hobby, just something my body naturally wanted to do, tapping stuff.

~Eric Hernandez

Playing drums or music, being a musician, is inside of you. So you would always see me tapping on something, playing on tables... I never felt the need to pull out drums.

~Eric Hernandez

I pretty much isolated myself away from drums. I stopped looking at Modern Drummer, I stopped looking at websites.

~Eric Hernandez

Once I became a cop and it's like when I got back into drumming; if I focus on something I become that, so I became a cop.

~Eric Hernandez

Even though sometimes you feel like you're hand cuffed you're really not because it really takes skill to play the music properly.

~Eric Hernandez

As a drummer my job is to reproduce what made the people bop their heads when they first heard the album on the radio, or when they watched the music video.

~Eric Hernandez

My dad taught me not to overplay, to think about my parts when I play, even in a live situation.

~Eric Hernandez

I shined off high school band, marching, jazz studies. At the time I was too cool for school, I had this professional gig and I was going home taking a shower and heading to downtown Hawaii, Waikiki.

~Eric Hernandez

I learned how to play the music working with my dad. Because in the beginning I was super excited, I had this gig, I was a kid, I got cocky and didn't want to take lessons.

~Eric Hernandez

I moved out of my house at 17 and half, I rented an apartment... I pulled all the things off. It was pretty amazing and I lived a pretty good life, I had a car and I was making good money.
