Think of every audition as a chance to perform and you will have fun doing it.

~Erica Schroeder

I was use to wearing things that accentuated and flattered my bust and waist (just shakin' what my mama gave me) and definitely not my thighs.

~Erica Schroeder

Try not be resentful or jealous of other people's success. Know that your path as a performer is going to be very different than others. Try your best not to compare.

~Erica Schroeder

I initially told people I wanted to be a dancer and ultimately a "Rockette." I didn't really know what a musical theatre performer was other than the Shirley Temple type.

~Erica Schroeder

I hardly ever belted; I was a soprano and a comedienne and intended on doing mostly soprano legit roles but my first equity show, to my surprise, was Blues in The Night at The Cleveland Playhouse.

~Erica Schroeder

My advice to aspiring performers is trust your instincts, 9 times out of 10 they are perfect.

~Erica Schroeder

When you don't get a role, it wasn't meant to be.

~Erica Schroeder

My favorite thing to do is transform. The further the character is away from me the more I enjoy it.

~Erica Schroeder

I love performing in a good straight play as well and I'm a crossover actor, I crossover from plays to musicals, musicals to plays. This is very difficult for performers.

~Erica Schroeder

I think any good singer needs to be a good actor. You have to be able to tell the story.

~Erica Schroeder

I'm an actor/singer who moves well... sometimes. I'm actually a great mover but not every style fits my body and a dance call back is my worst nightmare.

~Erica Schroeder

Every decade has a completely different sound not just musically but vocally.

~Erica Schroeder

What better motivation is there to get in better shape than imagining your thighs exposed, watusyin' and a shimmyin' all over the stage.

~Erica Schroeder

My dream roles haven't been written yet. My favorite thing to do is to dive into the uncharted territories of a new script that's untainted by someone else's idea of the character.
