If you want to mess with me, you'd rather be ready for the consequences.

~Francine Pascal

Love was more than blind. It was deaf and dumb, too. It was catatonic. It was vegetative.

~Francine Pascal

Luck doesn't shine her light on each of us equally. She is arbitrary, irrational, unfair and sometimes downright cruel.

~Francine Pascal

The human heart was undeniably the stupidest organ in the body.

~Francine Pascal

No matter when you were born or where, puberty is the same. It's the same for your parents as it is for you - what's happening in your body dictates everything.

~Francine Pascal

the more the merrier. so enjoy reading more books

~Francine Pascal

When I first heard the word existential, I didn't know what it meant. But then I found out that no one knows what it means, so now I use it all the time.

~Francine Pascal

Nature compensates for its mistakes.

~Francine Pascal

Humiliation, by the way, is a truly terrible emotion. It's at the bottom of the pile.

~Francine Pascal

She needed to get out of there. Her brains, thankfully, were still safely in her skull, but her emotions were splattered on the pavement.

~Francine Pascal

As pathetic as it was, she'd rather hold on to the possibility of something perfect than be hit with the reality of nothing much.

~Francine Pascal

He slowed down a bit more. "Gaia, how do you know these things?" She shrugged. "I'm smart." "And modest, too." "Modesty is a waste of time," she pronounced. "I'll keep that in mind.

~Francine Pascal

The people with the most fear have the greatest opportunity to be brave.

~Francine Pascal

Life's one great lesson was: Do not care. Not caring was a person's real protection.

~Francine Pascal

I don't do rewrites. I put all the pages in a pile next to the typewriter.

~Francine Pascal

But the way I see it, dying without knowing love would be a tragedy.

~Francine Pascal

I am seventeen. The good things about seventeen is that you're not sixteen. Sixteen goes with the word sweet, and I am so far from sweet.

~Francine Pascal

She figured if you weren't woman enough to carry your doughnuts with pride, you shouldn't be eating them.

~Francine Pascal

~Francine Pascal

The same way that some people can play the piano, I can do plots!
They just come!

~Francine Pascal

Since I was a small child, I was always writing either poems or plays... plays in which I had the starring part.

~Francine Pascal

I always loved reading. Growing up, my favorite book was 'A Child's Garden of Verses,' by Robert Louis Stevenson.

~Francine Pascal

Roger Collins wasn't the most popular teacher at school only because he was interesting in class. In fact, most of the girls would have loved a little after-class attention from this teacher.

~Francine Pascal

You see, Suzanne, history lectures bore me, art films bore me, your friends bore me, and, if you want to know the truth, I guess you bore me too.

~Francine Pascal

It's so trendy, almost bleeding to death. All the cool girls are doing it.
