[Donald Trump] is so unpredictable that foreigners are going to look around and say "boy, we've got to head for the safe havens." And one of the safe havens is Treasurys and [another is] the dollar.

~Gary Shilling

Despite the recent conviction of many that we're headed back to inflation, I think deflation remains the more likely prospect. You've just got too much excess capacity in the world.

~Gary Shilling

Investors aren't willing to accept the idea that we're in an era of lower returns.

~Gary Shilling

Let's say [Donald] Trump wins. Is Congress going to let him build a wall on the Mexican border? I don't think so.

~Gary Shilling

We've seen that in the past that where you've had uncertainty, and even where the Fed is raising rates, Treasurys rise as everybody heads for safety.

~Gary Shilling

If someone loves you, they can fall out of love with you but they're probably going to keep fearing you. That's where we are with [Donald] Trump.

~Gary Shilling

TPP is dead anyway, and similar deals in the eurozone are going nowhere.

~Gary Shilling

Treasurys, as low as yields are, are higher than they are in most other developed countries.

~Gary Shilling

We're in a pretty tumultuous world, and there's a lot of uncertainty. Treasurys are where people go as one of the few safe havens in the world.

~Gary Shilling

[Niccolò] Machiavelli said it's better to be feared than to be loved.

~Gary Shilling

The Fed wants to raise rates because they've been yelling and screaming about it. They've been crying wolf for so long that their credibility is shot, and I think they feel they need to.

~Gary Shilling

A [Donald] Trump win might be bad for stocks, but it would be very positive for the dollar and Treasurys.
