Knowledge has the form of a tree, and since metaphysics is the most fundamental one of the theoretical disciplines, it represents the roots of the tree.

~Gonzalo Rodriguez-Pereyra

I do not believe in the bundle theory anyway. The bundle theory postulates universals and I do not believe in them; so I do not believe in the bundle theory.

~Gonzalo Rodriguez-Pereyra

The difference between resemblance nominalism and class nominalism is that the former, but not the latter, brings in resemblance to account for the truthmakers of the propositions in question.

~Gonzalo Rodriguez-Pereyra

The huge majority of philosophers seem to think that including impure properties in the range of the quantifiers of the principle would make the principle trivial. I have argued that it does not.

~Gonzalo Rodriguez-Pereyra

At one point I took a copy of Berkeley's Principles from my father's library. That was the first philosophy book I read. I found it fascinating and wanted to read more philosophy.

~Gonzalo Rodriguez-Pereyra

Those who think that metaphysics is just misunderstood grammar will react to my giving metaphysics some place or another in the system of knowledge.

~Gonzalo Rodriguez-Pereyra

Although I felt I was quite good at criticising a philosophical position, I was not very good at defending and making a case for a philosophical position.

~Gonzalo Rodriguez-Pereyra

I think there is a metaphysical problem of the relation between mind and body. Thinking that there is no metaphysical dimension to the problem is an error.

~Gonzalo Rodriguez-Pereyra

Imperfect communities show that being a maximal resemblance class is not sufficient for being a property.
