I think professional sports, football, to use it as an example, it's fundamentally a form of entertainment.

~Gregg Easterbrook

You know, some of the good part of blog theory was that blogs would be like diaries that the world could read. They would be spontaneous, whatever pops into your mind, as a diary would be.

~Gregg Easterbrook

Torture numbers, and they'll confess to anything.

~Gregg Easterbrook

Stereotypes involving Christian identity, Christian persecution is so far back in history now that no one fears it being revived, unless you live in China, I guess.

~Gregg Easterbrook

Peace on earth and mercy mild are still possible. On Christmas Eve, all things are possible.

~Gregg Easterbrook

Everyone needs a certain amount of money. Beyond that, we pursue money because we know how to obtain it. We don't necessarily know how to obtain happiness.

~Gregg Easterbrook

And if there was something, suppose I wanted to write something really damning or embarrassing about one of the owners, that would really be a problem on the NFL's site.

~Gregg Easterbrook

When television producers say it is the parents obligation to keep children away from the tube, they reach the self satire point of warning that their own product is unsuitable for consumption

~Gregg Easterbrook

Jewish persecution is a historical memory of the present generation and people fear it in the present day, and that's why those references are so much more powerful. I just understand that better now.

~Gregg Easterbrook

I think the thing that I most appreciate now is that stereotypes involving Jewish identity activate fears of persecution that exist in the present day.

~Gregg Easterbrook

I don't think there are many larger lessons to be found in sports.

~Gregg Easterbrook

Instant-doomsday hyperbole caused the world's attention to focus on the hypothetical threat of global warming to the exclusion of environmental menaces that are real, palpable, and awful right now.

~Gregg Easterbrook

The science has changed from ambiguous to near-unanimous... Based on the data I'm now switching sides regarding global warming, from skeptic to convert.

~Gregg Easterbrook

The only reason runaway global warming seems unstoppable is that we have not yet tried to stop it.

~Gregg Easterbrook

How many times have you bought something thinking it would make you happy, and found it does not?

~Gregg Easterbrook

Seek happiness and you may or may not find it; seek grievances and you are guaranteed success.

~Gregg Easterbrook

For what I wrote that started this whole controversy, I deserved to be criticized, and I felt bad about writing it. I felt bad mainly as a writer and a thinker.
