I keep remembering â€” I keep remembering. My heart has no pity on me.

~Henri Barbusse

Stop war? Impossible! There is no cure for the world's disease.

~Henri Barbusse

It was suicide. Others killed themselves with poison or with a revolver. I killed myself with minutes and hours.

~Henri Barbusse

I see too deep and too much.

~Henri Barbusse

Yes, there is a Divinity, one from which we must never turn aside for the guidance of our huge inward life and of the share we have as well in the life of all men. It is called the truth.

~Henri Barbusse

whatever our ignorance left to itself, and whatever the wounds that other human beings are, we ought to study ourselves with a sort of devotion.

~Henri Barbusse

The woman from the depths of her rags, a waif, a martyr â€” smiled. She must have a divine heart to be so tired and yet smile.

~Henri Barbusse

Two armies that fight each other is like one large army that commits suicide.

~Henri Barbusse

There is no hell, no inferno except the frenzy of living.

~Henri Barbusse

It is not a woman I want - it is all women.

~Henri Barbusse

People are machines of forgetfulness

~Henri Barbusse

Two armies at death-grips â€” that is one great army committing suicide.

~Henri Barbusse

At the touch of mankind, things wear away with heartbreaking slowness.

~Henri Barbusse

We have the divinity of our great misery. And our solitude, with its toilsome ideas, tears and laughter, is fatally divine.

~Henri Barbusse

Let everything be remade on simple lines. There is only one people, there is only one people!

~Henri Barbusse
