How well a posse policy will fare in a world with 3 billion people below the poverty line and nuclear warheads scattered around a dozen or more regions like melons in a field, is not easy to imagine.

~Herbert Schiller

Deregulation has been, above all else, a means of reducing corporate business's accountability to the public.

~Herbert Schiller

With deregulation, one sector of the economy after another is "liberated" to capital's unmonitored authority. The very notion that there is a public interest is contested.

~Herbert Schiller

Triumphant capitalism has unleashed a powerful drive toward inequality, not improvement, in the social sphere.

~Herbert Schiller

how can a democratic discourse exist in a corporate owned informational system? Who, for example, possesses freedom of speech in such a society?

~Herbert Schiller

The actions and inactions of hundreds of millions of people and nearly 200 states, will affect what kind of world emerges in the time ahead.

~Herbert Schiller

Behind all the hype shaping the electronic highway are corporate interests. These huge companies are doing the most natural thing in the world to them; following their own corporate interest.

~Herbert Schiller

Ultimately, each transnational firm strives for its own advantage, and is supported in that effort by the state power wherein it resides, or at least where its main shareholders are domiciled.

~Herbert Schiller

But revolutionary is not an acceptable term to those who benefit from, and deny at the same time, the savage exploitativeness of the social system.

~Herbert Schiller

In the postindustrial age, labor is seen as essentially uninvolved in the social process because there is no need for assertive labor.

~Herbert Schiller

My university education had been a shallow and superficial enterprise. The central driving forces of the economy I lived in were either ignored or left vague, to the point of meaningless.
