Contrary to popular belief, English women do not wear tweed nightgowns.

~Hermione Gingold

A diet is when you watch what you eat and wish you could eat what you watch.

~Hermione Gingold

People who think about the past have no future.

~Hermione Gingold

One of the nicest things about living in America is the fact that sooner or later you are practically bound to get an award of some sort or other.

~Hermione Gingold

Really, sex and laughter do go very well together, and I wondered - and I still do - which is more important.

~Hermione Gingold

What Americans call cross-ventilation, the English call draughts.

~Hermione Gingold

Fighting is essentially a masculine idea; a woman's weapon is her tongue.

~Hermione Gingold

She never sets foot out of her apartment or her past.

~Hermione Gingold

[When asked if her husband was still living:] It's a matter of opinion.

~Hermione Gingold

There are far too many men in politics and not enough elsewhere.

~Hermione Gingold

I got all the schooling any actress needs. That is, I learned to write enough to sign contract.

~Hermione Gingold

My worst fault is my belief that if you put bills unopened behind a picture frame, there is no need to pay them.

~Hermione Gingold

Love is a worn-out word. People love their cat, they love their house. I've never been in love with anyone but myself.

~Hermione Gingold

My father dealt in stocks and shares and my mother also had a lot of time on her hands.

~Hermione Gingold

A great city is a great solitude.
