Killing a man should be harder than waving a length of pipe in their direction. It should take long enough for one's conscience to get in the way.

~Hugh Howey

Even in the darkness, his smile threw shadows.

~Hugh Howey

It was the hubris of each generation to think this anew, to think that their time was special, that all things would come to an end with them.

~Hugh Howey

Sometimes a thing needed opening before closure was found.

~Hugh Howey

Fiction challenges us and works its miracles by placing us in the skin of another human being and teaching us empathy.

~Hugh Howey

The best kisses in the world take place at night, in the ocean, with two naked bodies coiled around one another, only the stars to keep them company.

~Hugh Howey

It's easy to forgo distractions and to not accumulate things when you have a larger goal on the horizon.

~Hugh Howey

I'd rather excite the imagination of a legion of readers and make pennies from each of them than hold off for a larger chunk of change from only a handful of fans.

~Hugh Howey

"What we control," Juliette said, "is our actions once fate puts us there."

~Hugh Howey

My life is too tight, he wanted to say. My skin is too tight. The walls are too tight.

~Hugh Howey

There were certain things, learned so young and remembered so deep that they felt like little stones in the center of her mind.

~Hugh Howey

It turned out that some crooked things looked even worse when straightened. Some tangled knots only made sense once unraveled.

~Hugh Howey

I'm coming for you. I'm coming home, I'm coming to clean

~Hugh Howey

We are not the people who made this world, Lukas, but it's up to us to survive it. You need to understand that." "We can't control where we are right now," he mumbled, "just what we do going forward.

~Hugh Howey

When there's only God to blame, we forgive him. When it's our fellow man, we destroy him.

~Hugh Howey

I use social media not to ask new people to like my stuff. I use social media to connect with that one reader who likes my stuff.

~Hugh Howey

Statistics were magic like this: they could tell you with near-certainty that a thing would occur, without a hint of when or where.

~Hugh Howey

I am about to die. It is September 11, and every cell in my body is acutely aware of my looming demise. The certainty of it. The inevitability. Not years from now, not weeks nor days. Moments.

~Hugh Howey

We devolve into animals when we creep near to death.

~Hugh Howey

A seed of hope caught a taste of moisture. Some wishful kernel buried deep, where he was loathe to acknowledge it lest it poison or choke him, began to sprout.

~Hugh Howey

Run, we think, as buildings crumble. Run, as people perish.

~Hugh Howey

Living frugally is one of the best things an author can do to prepare for their career.

~Hugh Howey

Evan Price is not a man to be questioned. He is a man who will question you.

~Hugh Howey

That's the problem with the truth," Darcy said. "Liars and honest men both claim to have it.

~Hugh Howey

some things are better off back in the past. Where they belong.

~Hugh Howey

He thought of men like Hitler, Stalin, and Napoleon. All it took was a lot of seemingly decent people to put the wrong person in power and then fall under their spell.

~Hugh Howey

Heroes didn't win. The heroes were whoever happened to win. History told their story -- the dead didn't say a word. All of it was bullshit.

~Hugh Howey

One of the many things that surprised me about Wool is how many of its fans don't consider themselves science fiction readers.

~Hugh Howey

Predict the inevitable", she said, "and you're bound to be right one day.

~Hugh Howey

It was a sad loss, this illusion of importance, a humbling blow.
