My idea of a good hit is when the victim wakes up on the sidelines with train whistles blowing in his head... I like to believe that my best hits border on felonious assault.

~Jack Tatum

I like to believe that my best hits border on felonious assault.

People quickly forget that people are people.

~Jack Tatum

I like Ministry, but I'm probably never going to make a song that sounds like Ministry.

~Jack Tatum

The fact that I fell into this seemed more like a stroke of good fortune than hard work. Not to say that I didn't work hard, but it wasn't like, "I'm going to be a musician."

~Jack Tatum

I dabble in hip-hop, but my knowledge is so minimal, it's not even worth talking about.

~Jack Tatum

I don't place too much importance on words. It's always the last thing I do because I'm definitely more interested in mood.

~Jack Tatum

I was a very private person. All of a sudden, to see myself all over the internet and be like, "Oh god, do I want people to even hear this stuff?"

~Jack Tatum

I make the music that I make because that's what naturally comes to me.

~Jack Tatum

I still write poetry from time to time, but my whole life is so music-oriented at this point that it's hard for me to even think about having other hobbies.

~Jack Tatum

It always felt like I had to be a realist.

~Jack Tatum

I did a lot of writing when I was in college, and that's what I thought I wanted to do; saying that I wanted to be a writer seemed more reasonable than saying I wanted to be a musician.

~Jack Tatum

I was just working on music and reading. It was relaxing. I would just stay up so late for no reason because I was bored.

~Jack Tatum

It was like an exponential weed. And people treated me as if I was an established musician. I wasn't.

~Jack Tatum

I didn't try and say anything terribly meaningful. I'm definitely not a social commentator at all.
