If you want to work on the core problem, it's early school literacy.

~James L. Barksdale

Where we can compete on merit, we do very well.

~James L. Barksdale

If we have data, let's look at data. If all we have are opinions, let's go with mine.

~James L. Barksdale

We can collaborate with a Netscape employee or partner who's halfway around the world. We can distribute information and software to customers and shareholders, and get their feedback.

~James L. Barksdale

One of Netscape's main attractions to customers from Day One is that we provide alternatives. And that's cherished by many customers - certainly not all.

~James L. Barksdale

Our people are excited about building solutions, and it's rewarding to see how much fun Netscape employees have doing something they think is relevant and important.

~James L. Barksdale

I was telling the truth. I feel like we got that point across.

~James L. Barksdale

I think the touchstone is to give consumers a full, fair choice without the power of a monopoly operating system pushing them in a direction that free competition might or might not achieve.

~James L. Barksdale

The highest compliments leaders can receive are those that are given by the people who work for them.

~James L. Barksdale

In my column series 'The Main Thing,' I often talk about how Internet technology can improve the way people communicate - both within a business and between a business and its customers and partners.

~James L. Barksdale

We can provide beta software to our developers in advance of the general public. We can easily link up with external partners, customers, and suppliers.

~James L. Barksdale

I think they should separate Microsoft's application group from its operating system group.

~James L. Barksdale

There are no pat answers - we're pushing through some new frontiers, and lessons of the past don't always apply.

~James L. Barksdale

We've tapped into a huge demand, and it's up to us to fulfill that demand and to be creative doing it.

~James L. Barksdale

I don't believe in government regulation of the software industry.

~James L. Barksdale

We're building a great company, and we're very excited about the future of the company.

~James L. Barksdale

Climate change is a reality and if left unchecked, rising ocean tides will harm Georgia's Atlantic coast and threaten our state's robust tourism and shipping industries.

~James L. Barksdale

Well, the sales of our products clearly demonstrate their value to businesses and to individuals.

~James L. Barksdale

We provide many options in many product areas that they seem to want to adopt, and that's working well for us.

~James L. Barksdale

I've tended to work at fast-growing companies that improve the way business gets done.

~James L. Barksdale

After all, it's the future of business communication that we're looking toward.

~James L. Barksdale

Well, another market is being created now out of Internet technology.

~James L. Barksdale

We're no longer a small business; we're a large organization spread around the world. I can't imagine Netscape growing as fast as it has if it weren't for the way we use our products.
