New Zealand's taken some very significant decisions in relation to defence in the last two years.

~Jenny Shipley

It is important to remember that the Pacific Ocean covers a quarter of the world's surface and that each Pacific country has its own cultural, historical and ethnic identity.

~Jenny Shipley

Peace is a fragile thing. It takes courage to secure it. It takes wisdom to maintain it.

~Jenny Shipley

Equality and development will not be achieved however if peace is not understood from women's' point of view.

~Jenny Shipley

With the adoption of the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women, the international community sent out a clear message that gender based violence will not be tolerated.

~Jenny Shipley

The Platform for Action gives due emphasis to the fact that women globally have continued to have insufficient access to the resources necessary to achieve economic independence.

~Jenny Shipley

The world has been gradually reducing its nuclear arsenals. Testing must stop so that progress on the destruction of nuclear weapons may begin.

~Jenny Shipley

Hollow commitments to action in the future are insufficient. Deferring difficult issues must not be tolerated. Our children and grandchildren expect us to speak and act decisively.

~Jenny Shipley

By and large, women in New Zealand are fortunate compared with some other countries, including many in our own region. But there is still progress to be made.

~Jenny Shipley

The Pacific had great hope that when the former President Mitered decided to halt nuclear testing, we had put behind us the issue of nuclear states testing their weapons in our Pacific region.

~Jenny Shipley

I can't for the life of me see that by being permissive you actually assist anyone.

~Jenny Shipley

The decision by France to resume nuclear testing in the South Pacific has destroyed this hope and raised a storm of protest at home, in the South Pacific and thankfully around the world.

~Jenny Shipley

NGOs have a significant role to play, alongside governments, in improving the status of women.
