People aren't interested in seeing themselves as they really are.

~Jim Woodring

It takes more drawing to tell a story in pantomime.

~Jim Woodring

Alternative cartoonists have to rely on comic book stores to get their stuff in the hands of readers.

~Jim Woodring

Every time I write something down I check it to see if it has that telltale glow, the glow that tells me there's something there. If it glows, it stays. Everything is either on or off.

~Jim Woodring

The fiction I tend to like is nothing like my own work. I like the kind of writing that shows me things I don't know about, and what I don't know about is the everyday, normal world.

~Jim Woodring

I've often thought I would like to try to write a conventional novel, but I just don't know enough about the real world to write one.

~Jim Woodring

Oh, I was never a very big Jim Woodring fan. I've never thought his work was that great.

~Jim Woodring

A tree is an incomprehensible mystery.

~Jim Woodring

Doing a story about my mundane, waking life, how much I don't like my job, or breaking up with someone, I don't think so. Those stories don't interest me that much as a general thing.

~Jim Woodring

Comics could use more creators with something worthwhile to say.

~Jim Woodring

One of the best memories of my life is contemplating that first finished drawing and realizing I had cracked the code, that I could make drawings like this whenever I wanted.

~Jim Woodring

Leslie Stein's comics give readers privileged access to a complete and wholly original world of gently skewed wonders.

~Jim Woodring

I think that cartoons have a lot more power than they're given credit for.
