Rather than look at a marriage as two people morphing into one thing, you could see two individuals who are choosing to form a partnership.

~Joe Swanberg

There's something really nice about missing the person you're with. To have someone be apart enough to force independence and to also look forward to seeing that person.

~Joe Swanberg

If you're a working mom, you're still expected to be a super-mom at home, buy organic food, put dinner on the table every night, and do all the research into preschools. It's really hard.

~Joe Swanberg

There's a lot of cultural pressure around specialness and seeing your family. I feel like everything gets jacked up a little bit because of all of these expectations of love and family bonding.

~Joe Swanberg

Just because you married doesn't mean you're not an individual person with your own wants and desires and needs.

~Joe Swanberg

My directing is really weird. Everything is based on whether it's working or not. I don't try to fix something if it's not working, I'll just change it.

~Joe Swanberg

In the 10 years that I've been a professional filmmaker, the film part of the film industry is really disappearing, right in front of our eyes.

~Joe Swanberg

I think I'll try to keep working in film for a little bit. There's something still kind of magical about it, that I don't want to let go of.

~Joe Swanberg

Most of my horror inspiration is really older stuff and really new stuff.

~Joe Swanberg

The more that I work with people that I don't know, the more I invite somebody in who's potentially going to really hate being there.

~Joe Swanberg

I guess I probably see myself as a director. If I had to choose, I think that that's the aspect of the process that I'm most excited by.

~Joe Swanberg

I'm usually two projects ahead. It's hard for me because I don't have a really long attention span.

~Joe Swanberg

My relationship with my wife is fraught with all of the problems that any couples face, but there is a sense of humor that we have about it and a real desire to want to make it better.
