I am confident, however old-fashioned this may sound, that funds left in the hands of the public will come into the Exchequer with interest at the time in the future when we need them.

~John James Cowperthwaite

One trouble is that when Government gets into a business it tends to make it uneconomic for anyone else.

~John James Cowperthwaite

A glimmer of light is better than no illumination at all.

~John James Cowperthwaite

Money cannot be converted into houses or trained teachers or hospitals at the touch of a magic wand. There are limitations to our physical and intellectual resources.

~John James Cowperthwaite

I would suggest to my honourable Friend that the foreign investor is at least as discouraged by high national debt for that, as all example shows, is the surest precursor of high taxation.

~John James Cowperthwaite

Revenue has increased in this way is in no small measure, I am convinced, due to our low tax policy which has helped to generate an economic expansion in the face of unfavourable circumstances.
