Everyone can feel the nothingness, the void, just beneath the surface of everyday routines and securities.

~John Zerzan

The more the society becomes a technological society, the less it has to hold itself together.

~John Zerzan

We are lost, but other animals point to the right road. They are the right road.

~John Zerzan

We live in an era with no real sense of community or connection to nature.

~John Zerzan

The liberty that remains to us is essentially the freedom to choose among brands A, B, and C.

~John Zerzan

I don't think it could be a coincidence that the more technological a society is, the less it connects people.

~John Zerzan

There's a hollowness to civilized life. It doesn't appeal to people, and some people react with extreme violence.

~John Zerzan

Republicans don't want to shrink government. They want more and more military, more and more surveillance. They'd like to have the government banning gay marriage and so forth.

~John Zerzan

Mass society has displaced real community, where people function

together and account for their own lives.

~John Zerzan

"The people" aren't running anything. That's why technology has replaced politics as the source of ideology. The ideological claims are hollow and absurd, and nobody believes them anymore.

~John Zerzan

If you have a problem in mass society, you call the cops. The experts. You no longer have any operative connection with yourself or others, or with a functioning community.

~John Zerzan

We don't need more stupid ideas.

~John Zerzan

We have the freedom to choose between brand A, brand B, and brand C. That's about it for freedom.

~John Zerzan

It is our fall from a simplicity and fullness of life directly experienced, from the sensuous moment of knowing, which leaves a gap that the symbolic can never bridge.

~John Zerzan

I do what I do and hope that it might connect with people who are thinking along the same lines.

~John Zerzan

If we once, and for so long, lived in balance with nature and each other, we should be able to do so again.

~John Zerzan

The pleasure of authenticity exists only against the grain of society.

~John Zerzan

I think pushing the ideas is important. I wouldn't say it's more important than action. You can't really separate the two.
