I very much adore people who are outcasts, and I've always loved to be around interesting, circus-type people.

~Karen Elson

I just love vintage. I have far too many vintage dresses.

~Karen Elson

At school I got harassed so badly for being too tall, too thin, too pale - too everything that has gotten me where I am now, which is quite ironic.

~Karen Elson

I really don't like conference calls to be honest. It's always something that bloody happens with a conference call - universally never works out.

~Karen Elson

Obviously there are going to be a lot of skeptics. I only hope I can prove them wrong and give the idea of model-slash-anything a genuine chance.

~Karen Elson

I've not met one person, even if they are not creative, who isn't dysfunctional. I guess artists are just a bit more aware of their dysfunction because it serves a purpose.

~Karen Elson

I'm surrounded by freaks. Am I weirder than the rest of them? Ultimately I've learned to pride myself on being quirky.

~Karen Elson

I like feeling a bit of an outcast where I am. I've always been that way. Somehow, I fit in by not fitting in.

~Karen Elson

There comes a point where certain things are becoming my Achilles heel; you know when you start repeating yourself and saying the same anecdotes over and over again you start slowly hating yourself.

~Karen Elson

We all know people who are ridiculously famous, and it's a scary thing because all of the sudden people - even the people you are close to - stop being honest with you, stop telling you the truth.

~Karen Elson

I'm dedicating my time to going on tour and basically juggling music, modeling, and being a mother. Being a mother is obviously the most important.

~Karen Elson

I was afraid of being judged too harshly. But I'd let those fears overwhelm me for far too long.

~Karen Elson

I was always the weirdo at school. When I became a model [at 16], I didn't tell anybody. I was terrified that the kids would rip me to pieces.
