You have to salvage what you can, even if you're the one who buried it in the first place.

~Kelly Link

Everyone knows that wizards are pigheaded and come to bad ends.

~Kelly Link

Remember, when you don't know what to do, it never hurts to play Scrabble. It's like reading the I Ching or tea leaves.

~Kelly Link

Look. All books are weird when you think about it.... It goes without saying that real life is also weird.

~Kelly Link

Whether or not this story has a happy ending depends, of course, on who is reading it. Whether you are a wolf or a girl.

~Kelly Link

Most of My Friends are two-thirds water

~Kelly Link

A monster. You and your friends, all of you. Pretty monsters. It's a stage all girls go through. If you're lucky you get through it without doing any permanent damage to yourself or anyone else.

~Kelly Link

I don't think I'm cut out for a job where you have to look professionally tidy. I prefer working in my pajamas and taking showers after lunch.

~Kelly Link

Life is a series of sudden disappearances, leave-takings without the proper goodbyes.

~Kelly Link

The beloved may be treacherous, greasy-headed and given to evil habits, or else it can be a man in his late forties who works too much, or it can be an alarm clock.

~Kelly Link

Sometimes it is safer to read maps with your feet.

~Kelly Link

It's very unlikely that a writer is going to make a living by writing. So then the question is: how do you balance work, life, and writing? If you find out, please tell me.

~Kelly Link

I think that we want to be led slightly astray when we're being told a story. Just a little wrong footed.

~Kelly Link

The Customer isn't always right. Sometimes the customer is an ahole. That's the first rule of retail.

~Kelly Link

I'd be flattered if someone said that my work is "too weird" for them. I value the uncompliment.

~Kelly Link

You may very well ask what the goddess of love is doing in St. Andrews, writing trashy romances. Adapting.

~Kelly Link

The zombies were like Canadians, in that they looked enough like real people at first, to fool you.

~Kelly Link

Part of you is always traveling faster, always traveling ahead. Even when you are moving, it is never fast enough to satisfy that part of you.

~Kelly Link

You should never poison a witch.

~Kelly Link

Our eyes are always blind when they view the future.

~Kelly Link

Topiary has always seemed like a good occupation, comparable in some ways to writing short fiction.

~Kelly Link

The world is a dangerous place, full of people who don't trust each other. This is why I am staying up in this tree.

~Kelly Link

The initial spark usually has something to do with panic -- I'm due to turn in a story to a workshop or an editor. It's a terrible working method.

~Kelly Link

Becka might have been average in L.A., but average in L.A. is Queen of Mars in the visiting room of a federal penitentiary in North Carolina.

~Kelly Link

When I'm up for an award, there are usually two or three other things on the ballot that I like better than my own fiction.

~Kelly Link

Becka was almost good looking enough to be on a reality dating show, but not funny looking or sad enough to be on one of the makeover shows.

~Kelly Link

When you're Dead ... you stay up all night long.
