If you're not interested in your work, you're not doing it right.

~Kelly Sue DeConnick

Seriously, just buy the [expletive deleted] book. I promise you'll like it. Unless you're [expletive deleted].

~Kelly Sue DeConnick

There's a difference between feeling like I don't need to explain and deliberately confusing you. If the impression is that I'm deliberately confusing you, that is not what I am trying to do at all.

~Kelly Sue DeConnick

You can't write something actively trying to please everyone - you're going to end up with watery soup that way. You just have to write stories you would want to read and hope that people like them.

~Kelly Sue DeConnick

I wish I could say confidently that pacing remains my weak point, if you could talk about your own stuff without sounding like you're self-obsessed. But I think you kind of have to be.

~Kelly Sue DeConnick

I need to go where I'm not comfortable. I think that's the artist's job.

~Kelly Sue DeConnick

One of the things about comics is people can linger on images and words as long as they want.

~Kelly Sue DeConnick

I guess I am conscious of my weaknesses, and I think pacing is probably my biggest. I don't know if I think the clarity thing is actually a weakness. It was a stylistic choice.

~Kelly Sue DeConnick

My husband makes fun of me, because I know I can use strong prose to jazz-hand my way through plot that isn't as interesting as I'd like it to be.

~Kelly Sue DeConnick

I think I'm very strong at dialogue, I think I'm very strong in characterization. I think sometimes I use dialogue and character work to cover weaknesses in my plotting.

~Kelly Sue DeConnick

My creator owned books sell better than my mainstream books. And that makes no sense.

~Kelly Sue DeConnick

Having my brain doing different work is helping me a lot in terms of retro-feeding from the other experiences. It makes me feel inspired, looking forward to the projects and wanting to work harder.

~Kelly Sue DeConnick

The reader is not the customer. The retailer is the customer. So I try to have as much interaction with the retailers as possible because those are my customers.

~Kelly Sue DeConnick

I don't think we're supposed to say [expletive deleted] anymore.
