Mars, when guilty of homicide, and set free from the charge of murder by the Athenians through favour, lest he should appear to be too fierce and savage, committed adultery with Venus.

~Lactantius

The whole point of justice consists precisely in our providing for others through humanity what we provide for our own family through affection.

~Lactantius

Modesty in human beings is praised because it is not a matter of nature, but of will.

~Lactantius

Devils so work that things which are not, appear to men as if they were real.

~Lactantius

The first point of wisdom is to discern what is false; the second, to know what is true.

~Lactantius

Let it be known that this is the true Church, in which there is confession and penance and which takes a health-promoting care of the sins and wounds to which the weak flesh is subject.

~Lactantius

For they, the philosophers, were considered teachers of right living, which is far more excellent, since to speak well belongs only to a few, but to live well belongs to all.

~Lactantius

Where fear is present, wisdom cannot be.

~Lactantius

Memory tempers prosperity, mitigates adversity, controls youth, and delights old age.

~Lactantius

Nobody is poor unless he stand in need of justice.

~Lactantius

The prophets, who were very many, proclaim and declare the one God; for, being filled with the inspiration of the one God, they predicted things to come, with agreeing and harmonious voice.

~Lactantius

Let those who are famished come that they may lay aside perpetual hunger and be filled with heavenly food.

~Lactantius

But God, who is the Eternal Mind, is undoubtedly of excellence, complete and perfect in every part.

~Lactantius

Therefore, if the gods are immortal and eternal, what need is there of the other sex, when they themselves do not require succession, since they are always about to exist?

~Lactantius

But God, who is immortal, has no need of difference of sex, nor of succession.

~Lactantius
