Having a magical element in a realistic setting without explanation seems to me to be the hallmark of fairy tales, which present us with a kind of metaphorical look at some aspect of our lives.

~Laurie Foos

I'd say that most of life seems to me to be that way, a mixture of the mundane and the mythic, when you're living the life of the mind.

~Laurie Foos

I don't see the direct correlation between my personal life and the novel I'm writing until I'm at the end of the novel or very close to it.

~Laurie Foos

It's amazing what you can accomplish when you know you have to hit the ground running.

~Laurie Foos

As writers, we live very much in our own minds much of the time, buzzing in our unconscious spaces as we go about the business of living in the world.

~Laurie Foos

I feel that if I establish the world or the premise from the first line, then I can get the reader to come with me where I want her to go.

~Laurie Foos

When a certain show or film or celebrity captures the imagination of the masses that has a good deal to say about us, I think, and what is happening in our collective psyche.

~Laurie Foos

I could have a lot of fun with Michael Jackson, I'm sure.

~Laurie Foos

As I get older, I'm finding that I recognize certain celebrities only because they frequently grace the pages of US Weekly, but beyond that, I have no idea what they do.

~Laurie Foos

I'm a pop culture junkie. I'm a People magazine reader, an US Weekly subscriber; all of those celebrity magazines get my dollar.

~Laurie Foos

As a reader I gravitate toward work that rests in the gray area, that doesn't come with easy answers.

~Laurie Foos

I've realized that with each novel I seem to set out a kind of puzzle for myself. And I am never sure in the process of writing a first draft how it's all going to turn out.

~Laurie Foos

Fundamentally I think we all write the kinds of work we'd most like to read. Or we try to.
