Years ago I heard the Indian Jesuit Raimundo Panikkar say: Expect Nothing.

~Lawrence Fagg

I'm afraid my glass is no longer half full because I drank most of it.

~Lawrence Fagg

To insist that I am not forgiven is a kind of inverse arrogance.

~Lawrence Fagg

How much more comfortable it is to say 'Yes, and...' than 'Yes, but...'.
~Lawrence Fagg

~Lawrence Fagg

We all have the right to be wrong and be loved just the same.

~Lawrence Fagg

Until we can sense a sacred quality in time we will not begin to have a fuller understanding of it.

~Lawrence Fagg

I feel that the only true security I have is my capacity, however limited, to love.

~Lawrence Fagg

Ideals are great as long as they don't get in the way of what we want to do.

~Lawrence Fagg

I think that an act of love is immortal; once tendered, it can never really be taken back.

~Lawrence Fagg

If there were no nobodies, The somebodies would not have anybody,
To convince that they were somebody, Except some other somebody,

Who would not be convinced anyway.

~Lawrence Fagg

Before I can accept someone's help, I must accept their presence.

~Lawrence Fagg

The man who says that he does not deserve his wife is probably right, but not for the reasons he thinks.

~Lawrence Fagg

I see a good marriage as being like two tall trees growing beside each other, each nourishing the grace of the other.

~Lawrence Fagg

On the whole I feel that life has treated me rather well, but I sometimes wonder how well have I treated life.

~Lawrence Fagg

One of the small consolations of old age, if you are lucky, can be at least a partial recovery of innocence.

~Lawrence Fagg

Life is a process of continually reordering priorities.

~Lawrence Fagg

For some of us life is so fantastic we can't stand it.

~Lawrence Fagg

How unfortunate it is to be constrained by what people might say at our funeral or on our gravestone.

~Lawrence Fagg

How often have I tried just hard enough so that I can then say to myself that I tried with the real purpose of assuaging my guilt about something

I did not wish to succeed in the first place?

~Lawrence Fagg

How frustrating it is to be out-argued by someone you know is dead wrong but is more eloquent.

~Lawrence Fagg

It is said that in life we must play with the cards we are dealt, but too often I have kept those cards too close to my chest.

~Lawrence Fagg
